Generally these books are created from careful scans of the original. This allows us to preserve the book accurately and present it in the way the author intended. Since the original versions are generally quite old, there may occasionally be certain imperfections within these reproductions. We're happy to make these classics available again for future generations to enjoy! Excerpt from A Treatise on the American Law of Real Property, Vol. 1 In the matter of the changes wrought by the legislation of the States, new statutes are so frequent, and often so arbitrary and it is, at times, so difficult to get ready access to them, that, if errors in this respect should be detected, the cause may, per haps, be accepted as an excuse. In collecting and digesting the cases cited from the reports, liberal use, so far as they extend, has been made of the American Reports, a selec tion made by Mr. Isaac Grant Thompson with excellent judg ment and discrimination; while an earnest effort has been made, from other sources, to make the examination and colla tion of these reasonably complete. About the Publisher Forgotten Books publishes hundreds of thousands of rare and classic books. Excerpt from The Law of Real Property, Vol. 2 of 2: Based on Minor's Institutes In the three preceding divisions of this work we have discussed the tenures whereby real property might be held; the several sorts of real property, as corporeal and incorporeal; and the various estates or interests, which one might have in real property, with their incidents. We now have reached the fourth and last division, in which we shall inquire into the various modes of acquiring title to real property. Under this division of the subject, the first great classification, usually made, and which will be adhered to in this work, is into (1) Title by descent and (2) Title by purchase, which will constitute the two parts of this grand division. Excerpt from Elements of the Law of Real Property: Leading and Illustrative Cases This book is designed primarily for the use of students of the law, and is largely an outgrowth of the experience of the author in the class-room. A text-book of this scope on so profound a subject can be little more than a guide to the student and an assistant to the instructor. The method of teaching the subject in hand adopted by the author, and in accordance with which this book was prepared, embraces the lecture, quiz and case systems in the endeavor to utilize the manifest advantages of each. The superiority of a systematic course of lectures over occasional and unconnected explanations must be apparent. Nothing else can properly perform the functions of quizzes and tests, both oral and written. The study of illustrative cases impresses the student with the application of principles by the courts, thus demonstrating to him their standing as matters necessary to his knowledge of the law. Excerpt from The Law of Real Property, Vol. 3: Being a Complete Compendium of Real Estate Law, Embracing All Current Case Law, Carefully Selected, Thoroughly Annotated and Accurately Epitomized; Comparative Statutory Construction of the Laws of the Several States In the preparation of this, the third volume of our serial, the general plan as established in the preceding volumes has been followed, the only material change being that we have used in this volume not only all the real estate cases contained in the official reports issued since our volume two, but by the aid of the National Reporter System we have worked into it every real estate case published during the period covered by it, thus bringing the work fully up to date. In the citation of those cases not yet published in the official volumes we have left blank spaces for the appropriate references to the volume and page of the official reports. As these references become fixed by the publication of the official reports they will be supplied to our subscribers in convenient form without any extra charge. The index in this volume contains references to every legal principle contained in the entire series, has been made with the most scrupulous care, and then verified by a comparison of all the references with the sections cited. Again, we desire to make public acknowledgment of our gratitude for the generous patronage and the multitude of gratuitous words of praise which others have seen fit to bestow upon this publication. In return for these, we can only say that no exertion shall be spared to make each volume of this series an indispensable help to every one whose professional duties require of him an accurate knowledge of modern adjudications upon every principle embraced in this most important branch of the law.
